a delightful platform for the study of evidence. For example, many of our clients ask us to help them conduct surveys on important issues, given that many companies still have not resolved their own issues. Most of them have questions related to the success of the enterprise, excellent business results, quality of service, security of supply, etc. We also frequently conduct software surveys to help identify security issues in programs and fix them. We also help companies identify and analyze the complexities that arise in customer transactions. We conduct research on various issues such as service quality and program development.

Such programs often contain a so-called customer emotional profile, which helps to determine how loyal customers are to the company, and also identifies the so-called "unfavorable" customers. This helps improve the process, improving the chances of sales, service, and safety. Some research on the subject begins by examining the companies of their competitors to determine their strengths and weaknesses. We then provide information to clients so they can put that knowledge into practice.

Declaring such good intentions might not work.

Some of the largest companies are serious about behaving like "earnings leaders", justifying their market position by increasing the number of customers and profits. However, most entrepreneurs actually violate ethical norms and principles, producing excellent results only because they do not follow ethical principles. Leaders of large companies spend years developing and implementing ethical laws and behavioral protocols. But as soon as they begin to comply with everything, this situation will change, because. they will always ask themselves the question: "How well do they follow my ethical rules?" And it would be best for them to answer to themselves. They will ask themselves: "What am I going to do with my company? How do I want it to work? What am I going to do when I decide that I will stay here?" These questions will push them to one or another action. This is how companies that have not met ethical standards will never be able to restore them. 3. They don't think about the consequences. Entrepreneurs do not take ethical violations seriously, they think that if they violate the basic rules and principles of business, then everything will be fine. However, if they have to go against the tide, they face unpleasant things, such as loss of

---

---

---

trust, awareness, influence, reputation and money.
These problems often arise precisely because people do not think the consequences of these violations. When
